

Making TRPGs Easier & More Fun for Everyone

Week 1 Deliverables · Ideation & Problem Definition

NORTH AMERICAN TABLETOP GAMING COMMUNITY

A Hobby in Overdrive

50M+

Players Worldwide

Have tried D&D at least once

300+

Rulebook Pages

Before your first session

3–5hrs

DM Prep Per Session

For a single 3–4 hour game

THE CORE CHALLENGE

Three Problems Holding the Hobby Back

Too Hard for Beginners

300+ page rulebooks, hundreds of choices, paid digital tools

Too Much Work for DMs

Hours of prep per session — burnout is real

Hard to Find the Right Group

Mismatched expectations break tables apart

PROBLEM 1

Too Hard for Beginners

The Player's Handbook runs 300+ pages. Hundreds of rules, spells, and character options — before the first session even starts.

Rule Overload

Anxiety about making mistakes in front of the group

Paid Barriers

D&D Beyond helps — but some content costs extra

PROBLEM 2

The GM Shortage

DMs spend 3–5 hours prepping for a single session — writing plots, building NPCs, drawing maps. When one burns out, the whole table collapses.

Prep Burnout

Real hours, every week

Rule Interruptions

Pausing the story drains energy

Expectation Drift

Even Session Zero can't prevent it

PROBLEM 3

Hard to Find the Right Group

⚔️ Murder Hobos

Combat & loot focused

🎭 Drama Players

Emotional roleplay & character arcs

🔍 The Gap

No shared plan = tables fall apart

TARGET AUDIENCE

Who We're Designing For

Novice Players

Teens to 40-somethings. ~60/40 gender split. First impressions decide if they stay.

Dungeon Masters

Often volunteered, not chosen. Hosts, storytellers, and rule referees all at once.

Community Organizers

FLGS owners, library staff, campus club leaders. They keep the tables running.

When Beginners Quit, Growth Stalls

Why It Matters

Every beginner who leaves is a player the hobby may never get back. First impressions are nearly impossible to undo.

- A confusing or unfriendly first session usually ends a beginner's interest in TRPGs for good.

The Business Reality for Stores & Organizers

Issue

The Math Is Hard

- A group occupies a table 4–6 hours, buying 1–2 drinks
- Small stores run on 5–12% margins after rent & staff
- One DM leaving can wipe out a store's regular revenue

The Opportunity Ahead

Help New Players

Lower the barrier to entry —
keep them coming back

Support DMs

Cut prep time, reduce burnout,
grow the GM pool

Strengthen Communities

Give stores, libraries, and clubs the tools to thrive

Sources: D&D Beyond 2026 Roadmap · Hell Gate NYC · Games Learning Society · Fortune Business Insights